Healthcare Around the World

T.R. Reid

The United States spends more on healthcare than any other country in the world, yet measures of public health and medical outcomes lag behind other developed nations. How do other countries finance and deliver healthcare? What are other countries doing that we are not? What are we doing that they are not? And how can the US provide better care to more people for less money?

T.R. Reid has written and spoken extensively about how other nations succeed where we fail. Please join this intriguing discussion.

Co-sponsors: PSU & OHSU IHI Open School Chapter, Students for a National Health Program, Oregon Physicians for a National Health Program, and Nurses for Single Payer

Audience: Students and faculty in public health, medicine, healthcare management, and nursing
